

1. Throughout the quarter, I believe I have enacted my community values multiple times during the quarter. I've tried contributing to the community in this course by being attentive and respectful during discussion sections and group work. I actively listen to what my peers have to say and do my best to understand their perspectives and backgrounds. Although I can be shy at times, I actively try to engage with my group members and give them my full attention and effort. Being exposed to group discussions has helped me to become more open minded and has allowed me to meet new people, establishing connections that I didn't have before. Engaging with course material and communicating with others in group work has shaped a positive experience for me in this course. I am definitely still a bit shy, but I've grown to be more outgoing and respectful to those around me. Overall, practicing compassion and recognizing that everyone comes from different backgrounds is important in this course. During these class discussion boards, I enjoy reading people's different perspectives and experiences as it helps me grow as a person both academically and personally by learning about different cultural backgrounds and practicing compassion. I also believe that discussion sections have helped me become more understanding and patient when hearing experiences that are different from my own, which inspires me to step outside my comfort zone and try contributing to conversation.
2. Even though I believe I've been doing a good job thus far being engaged with the course and participating in group work, there is definitely room to grow. There have been times throughout discussion where I'm mentally disengaged, and just sitting blankly at the desk. There have also been times where I was on another device doing unrelated work, or times when I focused on doing my morning routine rather than fully engaging with the class. These actions affected my learning because it caused me to be less involved with discussions and group work, causing missed opportunities to better understand the material or contribute to a classmate's idea. In a community sense, I understand that me being disengaged may inspire others to do the same. For example, if someone sees me looking down at my phone during discussion they might feel inclined to do the same, which then creates an unhealthy learning environment for everyone in the class. To reflect, I understand the importance of staying engaged and being respectful to others in my discussion section, as it may not only affect my learning but also the entire community. I've realized that being present and attentive in this course is an important way to show respect to my peers and the class itself. Recognizing these moments has helped me become more self-aware and pushes me to improve in the future.
3. Moving forward, I learned that to be a good community member I need to put in real effort, stay engaged with the material, and attentively listen in discussion sessions. I've learned that by just simply engaging in actions like listening, showing respect towards others, and discussing with my peers, I can help create a positive learning environment where everyone can feel comfortable. I've also learned that through the group project, I am going outside my comfort zone and actively communicating with others to show them that I am engaged. In the future, I want to continue improving upon my participation and how I come off to people, as I believe these are skills that can help me in many different aspects of life, including future classes, work places, or relationships with others. Overall, the experience in this course has been great and I've enjoyed the discussion section and meeting new people. It has helped me better understand the importance of community and creating a positive learning environment where everyone can feel supported.
